THE JUBILEE CELEBRATIONS IN HONGKONG.

Hongkong, for the last two days, has been given up to jubileeing. Business of nearly all kinds was stopped for forty-eight hours in order that every section of the community might join in a grand and effusive demonstration of loyalty. Some five months ago, on the real 50th auniversary of Her Majesty's accession, Hongkong joined with the rest of her vast empire in sending telegrams of felicitation and in offering thanks for the divine blessing that had brought the peace, and prosperity which had characterised her Majesty's lifty years reign. This was really a worthy celebration of the jubilee-becoming a Christian and enlightened people; but as our population is largely composed of Asiatic peoples to whom gorgoous displays are the necessary concomitants of rejoicings, it was docided to set apart two days during the coo season for such jubilation. The Prince of Wales' birthday and the succeeding day were chosen. Of the policy of severing our thanksgiving and jubilation more need not be said than has been already oft repeated. This much, however, must be confessed that the complete success which has attended the magnificent demonstrations of the last few days and the levely cool weather they have been favoured with have justified in a great measure the policy

The bursting of the gun on board the Mutine was perhaps an accident that might have happened at any time but the death of two sailors at our jubiles celebration was nevertheless a most deplorable event and greatly marred the universal joy. With profound reverence we beg to celebrate the Jubilee of the glorious reign of Her Majesty the Queen of England. Many of the Canners. we believe, bore appropriate jubiles mottoes, and these are to be presented to the Queen in memory of the occasion. The night procession was much shorter than the day and consisted principally of transparencies and innumerable fishes of all sizes and orders which produced a very pretty effect lighted up with lamps. THE REVIEW OF THE TROOPS. At five o'clock on Wednesday afternoon. a review of the troops took place un the Parade and Cricket Grounds. As always occurs at such review, a dense crowd gathered at every point from which it could be seen. On this occasion a part of the Ground extending for some distance on each side of the saluting point, was reserved Mr Bell-Irving then read the following for European residents, who, instead of having to peer over the heads of Chinese coolies behind the outer railing, had the advantage of seeing the parade with some degree of pleasure inside this enclosure. The troops were drawn up in three battalions, two deep, extending from the top of the Parade Ground to the end of the Cricket Ground, where were the Gun Lascars with aix seven-pounder mountain guns. Two of the battalions were composed of the men of the Northamptonshire Regiment. under the command of Col. Anderson and Major Ellis, while the third was composed of Artillery and Engineers, under the command of Colonel Storer, the whole force. (bout 1000 strong, being commanded by Maj. Gen. Cameron, C.B. H. E. the Governor, accompanied by his private secretary, arrived on the grounds exactly at five o'clock and was received by General Cameron and his staff and by a royal salute. The troops then opened out into inspection order, and H. E. the Governor walked down the ranks and inspected them. On the return of His Excellency to the saluting point, the gunlascars fired a salute of seven guns. The troops then fired a feu de joie and the band played God Save the Queen. This was repeated twice, after which the men at the call of General Cameron gave three cheers for her Majesty. The troops were then formed into columns, with an officer at the head of each column, and marched passed and saluted His Excellency. They marched back in quarter columns and saluted, and then formed in lines of quarter column and insrched past a third time and salutedd They then regained their original positio. and after giving the general salute marchen back into the barracks

Looking along the narrow thoroughfore from either end the spectacle was quite dazzling in its brilliance. Most European visitors would be, perhaps, content to view it in that way. but not so the Chinese. They wandered amidst this scene of glory in a state of ecstatic contentment. Hord and there they stood in enraptured crowds gazing on the puppet shows and listening to the divine music of the gong. Along the sides of the street were placed miniature stages with groups of gorgeously arranged figures, representing -at least to the eye of the uninitiated European Observer scenes in the beatified domestic life of the Chinese Upper Orust. The almosphere of this palace of delight moreover was pervaded by an aroma of salt-fish, and decaying vegetable matter, as well as other delicate perfumes. which made the bliss of the visitor complete. In almost every street of the Chinese quarter there were puppet shows. each of which was attached an orchestra of great sound-producing power. It is difficult to say whether it was he orchestra or the moving figures that attracted the crowds, but it is to be presumed that people put up with the noise in order to see the show. The Chinese shops, almost without exception showed some kind of Jubilee decoration, and in many the displays of lanterns at night were very pretty. Indeed, by the thoroughness with which they entered into the portion of the community put their European neighbours very much in the shade. The Chineso have a natural talent for demonatrations of this kind to which they have given full scope on this occasion. In the matter of erecting arches, for instance, the Jubilee Committee as compared with them are nowhere. The number of the Chinese arches—that is if they can really be called arches—is legion. They are all of gorgeous superstructure resting on gailypainted poles. The ornamentation of the superstructure is of the most profuse description. The surface which is of embossed paper is broken up into innumerable panels filled in with figures, and the whole is resplendent with gliding and bright colours. From the bottom of the superstructure are suspended clusters of glass lamps which illuminate the street at night. THE ILLUMINATIONS.

When our second notice of the Jubilee elebrations appeared on Tuesday evening the decorations and the preparations for lluminating the City were by no means complete; but before Wednesday evening. the time fixed for the commencement of illuminations, everything was in readiness for the grand display. In Queen's Road, where we commenced our survey. the transformation, the beginning of which we referred to, was on Wednesday morning complete, and the appearance which this. the principal thoroughfare of the City presented was of the gayest and most animated description. The weather was highly favourable to the display and continued so throughout the whole of the two days that were generally observed as holidays. To the decorations of the City Hall, already noticed, there was added a portrait of Her Majesty the Queen, which found a place over the main doorway of the central building. This addition, however, can hardly be said to have greatly enhanced the effect of the illuminations. The picture was not seen to much advantage, and the artist seemed to have imparted an unduly melancholy expression to the royal features. The portrait was flanked by a couple of flags, on one of which was another specimen of the painter's art which looked, from the street, like a picture of a junk with Hongkong thrown in as an accessory. The trees in front of the hall were hung with a profusion of variegated lamps frum the topmost to the lowest branches, and the effect of this was strikingly beautiful. The transparencies fixed on the tops of the arches along he eastern facade of the Hall produced a soft and pretty effect, contrasting pleasingly with the more brilliant light shed by the anterns which were arranged in harmonious designs over the upper surface of the building. On the Prays side the business-like thoroughness which would be illumination of the building was seen to very remarkable were it not so natural to great advantage, especially from the harthe character of the people. The Queen's Road D'Auguilar Street and Stanley Street frontages were covered with various designs, while Chinese transparencies were exhibited at several conspicuous points.
